

How To Get To Know Your Story World With Worldbuilding Questions

Worldbuilding is an essential part of writing fiction. It's the process of creating the setting, history, culture, and people of your story world. A well-developed world will make your story more immersive and believable.

There are many different ways to approach worldbuilding. Some writers like to start with a map, while others prefer to develop the history and culture of their world first. No matter which approach you take, it's important to ask yourself a lot of questions about your world.

The following questions can help you get to know your story world better:

Geography

- What is the physical geography of your world? Is it a continent, an archipelago, or something else?
- What is the climate like? Is it tropical, temperate, or polar?
- Are there any major landmarks or geographical features?
- What are the natural resources of your world?
- Are there any unique or unusual aspects of the geography of your world?

History

- What is the history of your world? How did it come to be?
- What are the major events that have shaped your world's history?
- Who are the major historical figures?
- Are there any myths or legends about the history of your world?
- What are the lessons that can be learned from the history of your world?

Culture

- What are the different cultures that exist in your world?
- What are the beliefs and values of each culture?
- What are the customs and traditions of each culture?
- What are the arts and crafts of each culture?
- What are the unique or unusual aspects of each culture?

People

- Who are the major characters in your story?
- What are their motivations and goals?
- What are their strengths and weaknesses?
- What are their relationships with each other?
- What are their hopes and dreams?

Other

- What are the rules of magic in your world?
- What are the different types of magic?
- Who can use magic?
- What are the dangers of using magic?
- Are there any other unique or unusual aspects of your world?

These are just a few of the many questions you can ask yourself about your story world. The more you know about your world, the better equipped you'll be to write a story that is immersive and believable.

Tips for Worldbuilding

- Don't be afraid to ask yourself questions about your world. The more you know about it, the better your story will be.
- Don't be afraid to be creative. Your world can be anything you want it to be.

- Don't be afraid to change your world. As you develop your story, you may find that you need to make changes to your world.
- Have fun! Worldbuilding should be enjoyable. If you're not having fun, you're not doing it right.

Worldbuilding is an essential part of writing fiction. It's the process of creating the setting, history, culture, and people of your story world. A well-developed world will make your story more immersive and believable. By asking yourself a lot of questions about your world, you can create a world that is rich and detailed.
